

MyRepublic Moves Forward with Mobile Network Trial, Offers 12 Months Free Unlimited Mobile Data to Supporters

25 August 2015, Singapore

For Singaporeans eager to experience a MyRepublic Mobile network, MyRepublic has set 22 October 2015 as the start date for its first public Mobility Trial.

With the IDA's given permission, the telco aspirant will be installing new equipment in an area adjacent to the Jurong East MRT station (for a larger map, please refer to the Appendix) and deploying the latest small cell technology to form its own mobile network.

At launch, trial participants can expect outdoor mobile coverage across a number of blocks (the map area in blue) with further coverage at the Jurong East Bus Interchange and Jurong East MRT station scheduled to be added by November 2015.

One Step Closer to Unlimited Data

While mobile coverage will be limited to the designated area for the trial, there will be no limits on data usage for MyRepublic's mobility trial participants.

"The freedom of unlimited data has been a cornerstone of our 4th telco campaign and this is a chance to give people a small taste of what that reality can be like," says Malcolm Rodrigues, MyRepublic CEO, "We really want people to put our network to the test. Go nuts! Watch all the videos you want! Everything we learn here will better prepare us a real rollout."

Up to 500 members of the public will be selected as trial participants. To access the network, each selected participant will be provided a smartphone (potential models being evaluated for the trial include the Xiaomi Mi 4i) and a first-edition MyRepublic Mobile SIM card.

As a gesture of appreciation, all trial participants will be able to keep their given smartphone for free if they complete a short list of tasks by the end of the 8-week trial period. These include activities like uploading a couple of photos on Facebook and going on a guided tour of the Jurong East trial area.

Since MyRepublic officially announced its telco ambitions in April, more than 14,000 individuals have indicated their support for MyRepublic becoming Singapore's 4th telco, with over 13,000 indicating their interest in the mobility trial.

To shortlist the 500 for the trial, MyRepublic will be sending a follow-up questionnaire to gather more details from interested participants. Priority, for example, will be given to participants who work or live near the Jurong East area as well as MyRepublic subscribers.

Interested trial participants can still sign up at my4thtelco.sg. Trial registration will close on 8 September 2015.

Small Cells, Big Difference

The small cell technology featured in this mobility trial is of particular relevance to MyRepublic's plans to become a different, Next Generation telco. It is a vision shared by many Singaporeans, including Communications and Information Minister Dr Yaacob Ibrahim who was quoted as saying that the government didn't "just want another telco", but one that "can bring innovation to the market and therefore cause the existing telcos to also innovate."

Unlike traditional mobile technologies that rely on one large expensive base station to provide mobile network coverage over an area, these new small cells - as the name suggests - provide mobile network coverage using numerous small base stations spread across the area.

And as small cells can be deployed inside vehicles, lifts and narrow corridors, the technology promises an unprecedented level of faster, disruption-free mobile connectivity, enabling everyone to be connected online all the time.

Small cell technology has also helped strengthen the business case for potential telco entrants like MyRepublic, offering immediate scalability and more cost-effective deployment.

The People's Telco

Underscoring the viability of data-rich mobile offerings in its telco business case, should MyRepublic succeed in its mobile bid, its broadband subscribers will get to celebrate with the company with 12 months free subscription to unlimited local mobile data.

“It is an exclusive offer - our way of rewarding our customers who have been very supportive of our business and our mobility plans,” explains Yap Yong Teck, MyRepublic Singapore’s Managing Director, “We want everyone to share our vision and excitement of what Singapore mobility should be.”

All MyRepublic customers who have signed up before 30 September 2015 and remain a customer until the launch date of MyRepublic’s mobile services will qualify for the 12 months free unlimited data.
